THE ABC's THAT FEW PEOPLE KNOW
There's a new set of ABC's since you want to school. It's a shorter alphabet, but it is for more difficult to master than the one you learned in first grade. Instead of "A for Apple, B for Boy, and C for Cat," it goes "A for preventing certain eye disorders; B for certain types of loss of appetite, and nervous fatigue; C for certain diseases affecting the teeth and gums; and D for safeguarding against weak bones."

This is the start of the Vitamin Alphabet. With it you can spell better health for yourself and your family if you know which letters to use. It isn't easy, however. The infant, adolescent, the adult, the convalescent, and the woman expecting a baby have different vitamin needs and no one product fits them all.

Few adults know their vitamin ABC's well enough to use them properly... and so they depend upon their physician to advise and their pharmacist to supply them with exactly the product they need. Such products can't be bought as you would buy butter and eggs. In vitamins, as in all matters affecting your health and well-being, there is no substitute for professional guidance.
