WOMEN AND CARPETS

I want to talk about Women

Let's all sit down for a bit and think about being eternally grateful for the invention of women. Without women we would be out of business. They make the wheels run in our mills, our merchandising, our magazines.

Our CARPET business first, of course. Where would we be if we had to depend upon men? What man has ever begun a fine, wonderful morning by saying to his wife, "Darling, we simply MUST do something about this GOSHAWFUL ham of a living room. Let's get down to the carpet store today!" Quite the contrary, the chances are the chump secretly hopes the matter of the worn spots in the carpet will not come up in family conversation. No, folks, he's never the one to start the conversation ball rolling that leads to action in the carpet store. It's the women every time. The wives. The daughters.

And for good reasons. Women have been the homemakers ever since the first cavewoman's wife was clubbed for snipping off a yard or so of her mate's leopard skin to make the first mat for the floor of her cave. Women are the shoppers. They love to shop. They know how to shop. Men hate to shop.

And women respond to color as few men ever do, which counts with us because COLOR is carpet's number one salesman. (Remember the Roper study?) Women are far more color sensitive than men. Nobody knows just why—something to do with the number of rods and cones in her eyes. But it means that when she seeks a color that is exactly what she wants and she'll shop until she finds it.
