Free Wood Costs Plenty When You Add the Extras

The offer might have read "Free kindling—$50 a load." A Birmingham woman, who asked that her name be withheld, this week related the sad tale of a load of kindling wood.

It seems her husband was presented with the wood if he'd come and get it. He hired a trailer, fastened it to the rear of his car, and dashed home to pick up friend wife. She was busily roasting dinner—for guests—but being a good natured soul, left it and went along to help load the wood.

In her hurry to get to the car she tripped on a wire, fell and snagged a good pair of nylons. Clutching the remnants of her good nature, she climbed into the car and was whisked to their destination.

Once there she helped lug the kindling from basement to trailer, only to tear her dress quite badly.

ON THE trip home she fretted a bit about the dinner and decided to leave the unloading to the man of the house while she finished her culinary stint and changed.

All was going along on schedule, until hubby managed to get the car and trailer stuck in the mud. He heaved and pushed, shoved and hauled and the chain of tough luck added another link . . . he suffered a mild heart attack.

In recounting the tale, the sad housewife stuns it up somewhat like this:

Nylons, trailer rent, ruined dress, tow car and doctor bill—total about $50. All for a load of free-kindling wood when the family already had a basement full of the stuff.

The couple might well question the song which declares "the best things in life are free."

WE HEARD IT SAID BY—

MRS. CHARLES SHAW, International Relations Class leader: "The International Relations class in Birmingham is considered one of the most distinctive. Its speakers have always been top-notch. There are around 600 alumni of the class in almost every state in the U. S. and we hear from many of them who send us their good wishes and tell us that their interest in international affairs was stimulated by the Birmingham class. As far as we have been able to determine, it is the oldest class in international affairs in continual operation in the U. S. that is composed of voluntary workers."

nications"—a presentation that has already been given to such groups as the Institute for Audio-Visual Media of the University of Indiana, National Association of Audio-Visual Equipment Dealers and the Association of National Advertisers.

The Harding forums, have attracted attendance by industrial leaders from hundreds of prominent American firms, were launched some three years ago under the joint auspices of the college and a committee of leaders from the American Association of Advertising Agencies and the Association of National Advertisers.

Forums are planned to aid American management in the development of its own economic education programs and to interpret for the public current political and economic trends.
