PARTY
added his eulogy to the program.
AT THE CONCLUSION of the program, Dr. Raynale, in fitting words, thanked his many friends for their evening's tribute to him, adding that "I've enjoyed my professional and personal life with the thousands of people I have known here, and hope to be around to again see the Raynale party victorious in a national election."
George E. Averill, publisher of the Birmingham Eccentric, served as toastmaster for the occasion.
Dr. Raynale's long career in Birmingham has been further honored by the adoption of a resolution by city commissioners last week.
Commenting on his untiring service to Birmingham and vicinity, the resolution points out that he is the third generation of the Raynales to work here in a medical capacity.

BEGINNING SUNDAY, the Rev. Ralph L. Lee, 928 Lakeview, will assume his duties as senior assistant to the Rev. Harold E. Towne, pastor of St. James Episcopal church. Mr. Lee, who recently retired from a business career as director of public relations with General Motors, has been closely associated with church work since, as a boy of 12, he began singing in church choirs.

THE RESOLUTION reads in part:
Now, therefore be it resolved that in commemoration of these 50 years of practice, we the members of the City Commission of Birmingham, on behalf of ourselves and the entire community, do hereby gratefully make public acknowledgement of Dr. Raynale's lifetime of service to the community and express to him best wishes for many fruitful years in the future.
Dr. Raynale will receive membership in the Michigan State Medical society's 50 Year club during its annual session Sept. 22-26. A pin will be presented to him by Dr. Otto O. Beck, retiring president of the society.

Troy Opens Season With St. Joseph's Friday At Pierce
Troy High school opens its football season Friday afternoon when it faces a strong Bay City St. Joseph's eleven at Pierce field.

AS HE ROUNDS OUT a half-century of service to the community, Dr. Raynale has many memories of the growth and expansion of Birmingham.
A member of the Detroit College of Medicine's class of 1902, Dr. Raynale took up the medical pattern inaugurated in Birmingham by his grandfather and father.
The first Dr. Raynale, Ebenezer, began his practice in this area, coming from Vermont. His work was continued by his son, Dr. Charles Raynale, who in turn was joined by "Dr. George" after his graduation.
In speaking of his early years in Birmingham, Dr. Raynale recalled that his home was on West Maple on the site now occupied by the Wabek building where he and Dr. Robert Wessels have their offices.

One of the reasons for Troy's confidence is their 6'3" 190 lb. halfback, Fred Burnard.
Athletic Director Wood Larson stated that this game would be a good opportunity for area Catholic schools to see the strength of an upstate parochial school.
Starting time of the game will be 3 p.m.

THE RAYNALE home, where he and his father were born, was moved some years ago to Willis, between Henrietta and Bates, and is now occupied by Mr. and Mrs. George T. Hendrie.
"This section, from Maple north, was woods and farms," Dr. Raynale said. "Where these houses are now were once our playgrounds."
"We boys roamed through the woods where Brookside and other area streets are at present. We played up and down that ravine, our games changing with the seasons. There used to be some dandy roasting parties around this section of Birmingham, but too many houses spoil it today."
HE REMEMBERS his first car was a Maxwell, purchased about 1910 while he was practicing for a brief time at Harbor Springs.
"It was a good car," he smiled,

"but a lot of times was more hindrance than help to a bustling young doctor."
While "Dr. George" was a member of the "horse and buggy brotherhood," he passes the word of authority on the subject back to his father.
"My father was the horseman. He had some good ones and he liked horses. Some that he owned made some pretty good time on the tracks around here and father enjoyed talking about them."
DR. RAYNALE says that medicine and people haven't changed such a great deal in his 50 years of practice.
"People still need doctors and they still need medicine. We have a lot of new medical materials on hand today, of course, but sick people are sick people, no matter what the year."
"I don't think we get as many midnight calls as we used to do. Probably it's because so much emphasis has been placed on preventing illness instead of trying to cure it after it strikes."
"People are, generally speaking, more careful of their health than they used to be. I think the telephone and the automobile, which have made contact with the doctor easier, are partly the cause of this."

"ON A LOT of midnight calls, the doctor can tell from a description of the symptoms whether a visit is necessary or not. He can often tell the person what to do, saving a trip and putting the patient at ease just the same."
Speaking of midnight calls, Dr. Raynale chuckled as he recalled the story of the man who asked a doctor how much he would charge to make a night call. Learning it would be $2, the man asked if he might ride home with the physician, and the pair started out.
When the long trip was completed the man handed the doctor his fee and explained that there was no patient to be seen.
"The livery man said 'I'd charge me three dollars,' the man explained, 'so when you said two I thought I might just as well have you do it and save a dollar!'"

Survey Indicates Need for Sidewalk
After reading a pedestrian and vehicle count taken along W. Lincoln last week by Police Chief Ralph W. Moxley, city commissioners appear ready to officially order in the missing sidewalk gaps between Southfield and Cranbrook roads.
At a hearing next Monday night, commissioners will meet with Lincoln residents, who several weeks ago succeeded in having the city temporarily hold up the sidewalk installations until such a survey was made.
Last week an average of 32 pedestrians were discovered using the street to walk on, and 5,995 vehicles drove over it on Sept. 10, Moxley reported.
A survey taken by school officials showed 160 high school students indicating they would use Lincoln if walks were available.

Stanley St. Residents Have Second Block Party
Second annual "block party" for Stanley street residents was held Saturday night with Ed Dingle calling for square dances.
About 75 persons attended the affair, planned by Mr. and Mrs. Leo Renault, Mr. and Mrs. Jim Everett, Mr. and Mrs. Russell Rogero and Mr. and Mrs. Fred Matthias.

THE RIGHT BOOKS
-- Tools of Understanding!

Among the multitudes of books being published some deserve to be in your library for valuable re-reading, others deserve to be read once, others not at all. Thus, if your aim is to understand the issues of the day, it becomes imperative that you choose the right books. They, after all, are the tools of understanding!

We have books of all publishers. All titles cannot of course be kept in stock, though a goodly number are. But because ours has always been a personal book service we will as quickly as possible procure any desired title for you, and you may be assured we are always glad to consult with book-lovers who read for understanding's sake.
