KEEPING PACE WITH MICHIGAN

Michigan's phenomenal growth and industrial expansion during the 36 years since this organization was founded, have antedated the entire world.

Detroit's population has grown from 1/2 of a million to 3 1/2 million in the metropolitan area—an increase of 433 per cent. Other Michigan cities have expanded to a comparable extent.

Providing this rapidly increasing city population with an adequate supply of the most perishable of all foods—milk—has posed difficult problems. To solve them called for intelligent, far-sighted planning by men who understood every phase of the complex milk supply problem, all the way from the cow to the door-step.

The Michigan Milk Producers Association never has failed in its obligations to both the consuming public and the producing farmer. It has constantly anticipated future needs of both and met them unflinchingly on every occasion.

More than 16,000 dairy farmers working together through their cooperative organization have kept pace with fast-growing Michigan. Today, as always, the plants and transport equipment to guarantee delivery of an ample supply, handled in the most sanitary method, at all seasons of the year.
