SINCE RALPH RILEY (left on the platform) has been transferred from catching dogs to maintaining the city's traffic signs, signals and markings, he's turned inventor. With his helper, Everrett Bennett, Riley works on the Woodward-Willets-Oakhand light with considerable comfort from the platform he designed and made. Mounted on a city truck and equipped with a guard rail, the platform surpasses the ladder previously used. City officials say this will launch a program of keeping lights washed and painted and replacing bulls before they hurn out, providing a better, safer traffic signal before they burn out, providing a better, safer traffic system for motorists.
