Plans Revised To Reduce Costs Of Troy Schools

It is hoped by the Troy township board of education that the revisions that have been made in plans for construction of additions to three elementary schools will bring building costs within the range of present budgets.

Bids recently received for the job, according to Supt. of Schools Stewart K. Baker.

A bid of $304,206 was approved two weeks ago by the board for construction of the junior high school on Boyd street just east of Rochester road in unincorporated Big Beaver. Baker said construction on this school has begun.

THE BOARD decided it must revamp plans for the elementary additions in order to seek lower bids.

Thus far the board has planned to delete skylights from plans at an estimated savings of $10,000, Baker said. He added that another decision to leave out kitchen equipment will save $15,000, and that elimination of plans to make alterations on the buildings to which the additions are to be made will save another $10,000.

The board also is looking into the possibility of reducing costs on the junior high school in order to divert funds to the elementary additions.

"ALTERATIONS of buildings always are a bug-a-boo to bidding, and we hope to get more attractive bids due to our decision to not undertake the alterations at this time," Baker said.

The board has passed a resolution to receive new bids on Jan. 12.

"We expect that due to the changes made, these new bids will be within the amount of money we can spend," Baker concluded.

"Pooh," said Luke from his corner.

"Pooh? Did you ever see one?"

"See one? I married one!"

MICHIGAN OUTDOORS

MORE DEER SEASONS AHEAD?

Many of you may have seen the "Michigan Outdoors" TV show recently, with Conservation Department game chief Harry Ruhl as an impressive guest. If so, you now realize that management of our Michigan deer herd is no small problem, and that in the years ahead the legalized killing of does and fawns must continue.

Mr. Ruhl, well-equipped with statistics to back up his statements, said that the present Michigan range could adequately support a herd of about 500,000 deer if they were properly distributed. He further stated that, to maintain the herd at that figure so that winter starvation would be avoided, we could and should "harvest" up to one third of the deer annually, including does.

There is no arguing with biological facts. This writer will go along with game experts who have declared the peak deer populations should be around the half million mark. But when it comes to arranging that deer herd so that the animals are properly distributed over the state assuring plenty of food to go around—we'll have to ask how the present deer law is answering that problem!

Sectional Shooting Needed

It would appear that the only sensible method of control in the future, once the size of the herd is pared down by present regulations, is to specify areas where the deer population is too large and open a special season in those problem territories. Involved and complicated? Certainly! But so is the whole business of deer herd management.

Half-way measures will always bring strong censure from the public. Open "any deer" seasons will always result in an erratic harvest of animals with over-kill in some places and under-kill in others.

It seems to this writer that the distribution of hunters is just as important as distribution of the deer in our herd control project, so why not plan future regulations accordingly?

Upper Peninsula Puzzle

The Conservation Department has no power to open an "any deer" season above the Straits. Winter starvation has killed off an appalling number of animals in that portion of Michigan, and this year's hunt will have a better chance at a buck in the southern half of the State. Next year's legislature should ponder the matter carefully. If discretionary power for deer control is worth its salt in the lower peninsula let's extend it to include the entire State for 1954. It will stabilize our thinking, at least, and is a logical step in stabilizing the deer herd, too!

We cordially invite You and Your Family to have your Thanksgiving Dinner with us.

We shall be open from 9 a.m. to 1 a.m.
