AROUND THE HOUSE

There are a great many people today who admire good modern furniture but feel they must stick with traditional furniture because they have a desk, some old silver and china, or perhaps, a sofa that their wish to keep for sentimental reasons or because they can't afford to replace them and buy the other pieces they need.

Advice coming from the outstanding decorators of the day is to forget the controversy between modern and traditional. Good design, no matter what its style, can mix with any other good design. That's why a modern desk is appropriate in an eighteenth-century library.

Modern is not a style but a way of thinking. Modern is a way of life that deserves the name has to be more than an unusual shape with chromium rods or plywood do-stands. What makes it modern is how it fills the needs of modern-day living. It must save space, perform efficiently, be easy to keep clean and adapt itself to more than one specialized use. In the best modern furniture you will find such features as adjustable shelves, removable partitions, reversible cushions and surfaces that are smooth and easy to clean.

Many people wouldn't recognize good modern furniture as modern because it is not extreme, and blends in well with old silver, flower prints and the like.

The supreme test of good furniture of any period is—is it timeless? Good modern is; Sheraton is; Chippendale is. Their lines are clean and will always be pleasing to the eye and to the universal idea of beauty.
