Sewing vestments for Our Lady Queen of Martyrs church

Vestments and Linens Sewn by Parish Guild

Vestments worn by participants in the opening service of Our Lady Queen of Martyrs Catholic church at its Christmas Eve midnight mass were the handiwork of a group of women of the parish.

Founded when the parish was created in October, 1951, the Blessed Sacrament guild completed the vestments and church linens in time for the first service.

Mrs. Eugene Kidd, chairman of the project, said that thousands of hours had been put into the work.

A small group of women met each Tuesday for more than a year to work on the project. The vestments were copied from exquisitely designed French imports, Mrs. Kidd said.

THE HEAVY gold brocade robes are appliqued in crimson and emerald green velvet. This is embossed with intricate designs of gold cord and embroidery.

"The large supply of altar linens were sewn by hand. The lace and embroidery on them is all hand made, too. The whole represents hours and hours of devoted labor."

Members of the Guild pointed out that for hundreds of years it has been customary for the nuns in convents all over the world to do this work.

"The idea of having the women of a parish prepare the vestments and linens is comparatively new," Mrs. Kidd explained.

"THESE WOMEN are finding the work fascinating. In addition, they feel that it is giving them a deeper relationship to the church and an even greater interest in the services when they can see this tangible evidence of their part in them."

Mrs. Kidd said that, altogether, about 20 women had worked on the project, with Mrs. Thomas Doe, Jr., as co-chairman.

"Due to the demands of their homes several of the workers were able to meet with us only infrequently". Mrs. Kidd said. "The group which gathered each Tuesday usually numbered eight or nine."
