Hot Weather Aids Cicada Emergence

By ALICE E. MORGAN

Birmingham-Bloomfield area cicadas are having what is quite possibly one of the longest "coming out" parties on record.

Officially the affair was opened Friday afternoon with Walter Nickel, Cranbrook scientist, acting as "host." During the afternoon several hundreds of people arrived at the Trowbridge road location, along with a scattering of photographers (press and amateur) to greet the little visitors.

Really, they deserve all the excitement, for it has taken them 17 years to make the transition from tiny white grub to a winged insect more than an inch long.

Most of their time has been spent below the surface of the ground, getting their food supplies from the roots of trees.

SO FAR as we know, the cicada has not told anyone what guides his next step—that is, what factors enters into his selection of a suitable leaf on which to change his clothes.

Be that it may, this wingless, white bug uses his sturdy legs to haul himself up the trunk of a tree and attach himself to the underside of a leaf, which he immediately turns into a dressing room.

The insect then, according to Nickel, goes through a series of muscular spasms which result in a tiny slit in the back of the shell-like casing just below the head.

Now the body is black, topped off by a pair of bright orange eyes. The wings exceed the body length and are gray with a heavy orange rib along the outer edge of the wing-tip.

Friday, of course, was not the first day for the cicadas to appear, but it was the starting point of the mass exodus. Over the entire area there was the odd sound, neither a whistle nor a hum, which the thousands of insects made.

A COOL BREEZE dropped through the branches and the woods became mysteriously silent save for the call of the birds and the voices of the visiting humans.

Saturday and Sunday saw a steady stream of cars visiting the area. For short distances each side of the road, the brush and vines were trampled flat. Countless thousands of twigs and leaves have been broken off and carried home mostly by youngsters who hope to save the clinging shells for class examination next fall.

Sunday the whole area was surrounded by the overtime of sound and the cicada which, at maturity and forth with his neighbors.

It is almost certain that the great majority of the cicadas have already made their appearance, although stragglers may appear from time to time as the hot weather continues.
