Strange Guest Upsets Routine At Art Gallery

Mysterious footprints indicated a strange visitor at the Little Gallery last weekend. A gallery employee noticed small footprints on the back porch when she arrived at work Saturday morning and identified them as belonging to a raccoon. Peggy DeSalle, owner of the Gallery, at first believed there were no "wild animals" in that populated Birmingham area. But sure enough, a few minutes later scratches at the back door introduced their weekend visitor as "The Masked prowler", a full grown raccoon.

Mrs. DeSalle's assistant realized their mistake in leaving the door open several hours later when the raccoon was found investigating the loom room and rambling through various yarns. Seemingly to be completely tamed, the prowler mastered the stairs with authority and became frightened only when the women decided he (and they) would be safer with the pet outdoors again.
