Order Rec Study In Troy Township

Twenty Troy township residents voted to survey the recreational needs of the township at a meeting Wednesday night, Sept. 30, called by the park and recreation commission.

Representatives of the commission met with officers of the board of education and township board to hear a review of planning community recreational facilities given by William G. Robinson, retired recreation consultant of the University of Michigan Extension Service.

Robinson explained the program needed to institute a year-round recreation plan and stressed the importance of an area study to determine the facilities that could be best provided in the township.

Members named to a survey committee are expected to be announced soon.

Red Cross Needs Women To Help with Mending

"GETTING STARTED"

Shooting from blinds is normally done in a large marsh or near the shores of a lake. Blinds are built to hold two runners and a dog, and are camouflaged with bunched straw. Decoys are set in front of the blind, and a duck call can come in handy at this point.

Marsh shooting is done from a duck boat, which is a craft with very little freeboard. The blind boat is punctured with a pole thru the marsh until a "pot hole" is found, or a spot where duck gather to feed or rest. The duck boat is then pulled into the rushes, the rushes are broken over the boat and the gunner crouches in concealment awaiting a flight. Again a duck call properly used is very effective. Decoys are essential.

Sneak and layout shooting requires the largest number of decoys—almost 100 in some cases. When the decoys are set, the two man sneak boat waits up-wind until the ducks settle, then call loose to drift down within shooting range. The layout hunter lies flat on his back in a plumage suit, with decoys only a few feet away from him, downwind. Ducks don't seem to mind the tiny boat near the hunter if he lies perfectly still. As they flare in to land, he rises to a sitting position to shoot. Pick-ups are generally made by another boat.

New Signs Will Be Much Easier to See

Four large signs—each of them 3 by 4 feet — were expected this week for installation at the Hutler-Maple intersection, proclaiming "no left turns" from Maple onto Hunter.

Police Chief Ralph W. Moxley said the signs would be installed immediately upon their arrival.

These large signs are necessitated because, according to Moxley, motorists at this busy corner have not been noticing the smaller signs presently there.
