

PLAY IT SAFE Guard Against Fire In Home Furnishings

Davenport, overstuffed chairs, mattresses and covered springs, among the most widely used pieces of furniture in the home, constitute the greatest danger to life of any other furnishings.

The above statement is based on the fact that people who use these pieces of furniture are relaxed and in most cases considerable smoking is done during the relaxation interval. Fire from cigarettes, pipes or cigars when dropped on any one of these pieces of furniture generally falls in the cracks or joints of the cushions. Ashes that supposedly contain fire are brushed from the surface and fall in these cracks.

This fire will smolder unnoticed for hours, often until after the people who have used them have gone to sleep. It is then, with little or no warning, the fire breaks into an open flame. The primary reason these fires smolder so long is because no oxygen or air is present in the cracks to let it flare up rapidly.

Instead the fire gradually eats its way into the inner air space of the cushions provided for the springs and their action. Here air and oxygen is present in abundance and the complete interior of a davenport or mattress can be involved in fire and still escape detection.

If it should be detected by people who are not familiar with the characteristics of this type of fire they merely, in most cases, pour water over the surface of the cushion. Then, believing the fire is extinguished, retire only to awaken and find their home or bed completely enveloped in fire.

The only way a fire of this type can be completely extinguished with any assurance of safety is by using high pressure water streams that will penetrate the cotton and padding surrounding the springs.

Your fire department is the only group equipped to make sure, beyond a question of a doubt, that this fire is safely extinguished. They will take the furniture outside and cover it with a tarp if there is any uncertainty.

If a party has been held in the home, the person responsible for the home should check beneath the cushions of overstuffed furniture to detect any possibility of fire before retiring for the night.

Play it safe! When a piece of overstuffed furniture or bed has been on fire or has been exposed to fire, call the fire department. The men you employ and who understand these fires and will assure you, before you retire, that the home is safe for you and your family.
