

Edward Cole Talks in Panel At Art Institute

Edward Cole of 335 E. Frank was one of four participants in a panel discussion on a Sunday program, presenting exhibits in the Detroit Institute of Arts' annual exhibition of Michigan artists. Cole, whose painting chosen for exhibit in the DIA show is a modern figure study in blacks and whites, was invited to discuss graphic art with David Ruben, Lillian Wolke, and Kay Burkitt Miles in the Founders Lounge at the Institute.

COLE IS EMPLOYED by the Art Display service, a small Detroit silk screen process business where he does photographic and design work. He and Mrs. Cole have two children, Carol, 3 and Edward, Jr., 15 months. He has bachelor's and master's degrees from Cranbrook and has lived in the Royal Oak and Birmingham areas all his life. His paintings have been exhibited at the Detroit Artista market several times, including a one-man showing last year.

Popcorn, Cookies Deck Yule Trees Among Antiques

An old fashioned Christmas tree that will fit among historical items was the problem facing Mrs. Robert W. Brandon and her committee. She, as a member of the Detroit Historical society guild, made plans for the tree decor and greenery for the Hall of Patriotism for the Detroit Historical museum.

POPCORN STRINGS and cookies are among the simple things they placed on the tree on Sunday, in a work session with the women members and their husbands. There, were, of course, no lights placed on the tree, but spotlights were aimed from the ceiling.

Mrs. Brandon, who moved to Pine Hill drive from Detroit with her family in July, is probably the only Birmingham area member of the guild, whose members tend the "Old Detroit Shop" in the museum and model gowns from the museum collection for shows to relatively large organizations. She is chairman for the guild's annual spring event, the Patriotic Ball, and has been active in plans for the open house at the museum next Sunday. St. Paul's choir will sing for that event.
