Prosperous Year Seen By Members Of Toastmasters

This week's table topic at the Birmingham Toastmasters Club was "What's Ahead—Boom or Bust?" under the direction of Robert DenDyl. The consensus of the membership indicated an optimistic outlook for business in 1954.

Winner of the club's weekly "Oratorical" was Robert Hargis.

Making his first speech before the club, Ata Berker in his "Icebreaker" told of the impressions of a young Turkish engineer locating home and livelihood in the United States of America.

Dick Blensman's speech "Gift of a Lifetime," told how material possessions fail in assuring personal happiness and how faith shows the way to peace of mind.

Peter Stoffel completed the basic training series in his speech entitled "What This Country Needs," a talk of the need of the American public for some basic understanding of economics.

The educational speech of the evening was made by William "Pat" Murphy whose talk "Breathing for Speakers," was a demonstration of breathing exercises and the importance of diaphragmatic breath control to speech and health.

Toastmaster of the evening's program was Joseph Hengeman who introduced the speakers. Robert McKenzie directed the evaluation of the speakers and the conduct of the meeting.
