City May Restrict Use of Property It Sells—Hascall

SHARON ANN MURPHY

If the city desires to sell and restrict the use of six lots it owns on East Maple way, there is nothing to stop it, Birmingham City Attorney Forbes S. Hascall said this week.

"So far as I can ascertain, there is no provision either in the city charter or the state law which would prevent the city from selling the lots subject to such restrictions as it might see fit to impose," he declared in a written opinion to the city commission.

Three of the lots are on Maple, just west of Coolidge. The other three lots are immediately north and face on Yorkshire.

CITY OFFICIALS are inclined to preserve single family zoning in that area, and have wondered if the city can legally sell the lots and restrict their use to homes.

Adjoining Maple lot owners have been pressing the city for several years to restore to business the blocks between Coolidge and Eton.

Voters at the Aug. 3 primary will decide whether to give the city authority to sell these six lots.
