There is no more natural mink instinct than to duck or duck when something threatens to hit you. So watch out for that pedestrian who may step back in from being hit by one car — and move right in front of you.

Smart drivers have to learn a lot about "cause and effect" in traffic. It's as natural for a threatened pedestrian to jump away from the threat as for a man to get up suddenly if he sits down on a tack.

To keep from hitting a pedestrian on the "rebound" you not only have to keep your eye on the pedestrian but you have to spot any car that may scare him in front of you.
