Janie Hart Crowds Her Busy Days With Campaigns, Visits to Daughter

"She'll tackle anything," her friends say of Janie Hart, wife of the Democratic candidate for lieutenant governor of Michigan.

The slender young woman has many projects—enough to keep her days crowded without the aid she gives to the campaign.

Visits to her daughter, Ann, who is recuperating from a summer attack of polio, keep her well-familiar with the highway between a children's convalescent ward in Farmington and the Victorian home she's calling home across the street from the state's capitol building.

BUT TRAVEL HAS alternatives for Mrs. Hart—It's a plane for quick trips and long distances, or even a horse is fine for quick recreational trips. She's a member of the Hunt club here, and used to ride a great deal when she was here.

And housekeeping, in the Fred Alger home in Lansing that they rented, after renting their Birmingham home on Westwood to the P. C. Garrison family, includes cooking the meals for the five youngsters at home.

"She has terrific energy," says Phil Hart, "she looks for the kids (the Harts have only one helper, a 13-year-old high school girl) does her domestic work and still manages to be helpful in the campaign."

last year from near Pontiac to its location on several floors of the hospital building.

MRS. HART'S INTEREST in Birmingham has included her duties on the local government group of the League of Women Voters. "When Janie gets interested in something," according to Mrs. Garrison who knew her years before she rented the Hart home, "she tries to study and find out about it."

But study of legal matters has taken her husband through such governmental jobs as U.S. District Attorney for Michigan's Eastern district and legal advisor for Gov. G. Mennen Williams. At 41 he has been Michigan Corporations and Securities Commissioner, a vice-president of the Detroit Tigers and a director of the World Champion Lions.

AN INFANTRY VETERAN of World War II, he was decorated by three governments (including the Purple Heart) for wounds received in the D-Day invasion of Normandy Beach.
