

LOW, COLORFUL AND MODERN would best describe the new Stuart K. Baker Junior High school in the Troy school district. The $300,000 building in Big Beaver was opened for the first time this week to an estimated seventh and eighth grade enrollment of 425 students. The school, named after Troy school district's superintendent, contains 11 classrooms, gymnasium, auxiliary rooms and offices. A large playground area at the rear of the school includes both baseball and football fields. The new road running east from Rochester road to the school is expected to be named Torpey drive. Principal is Boyd Larson, formerly the school district's athletic director. (Eccentric Photo)

A few spectators supported the city's plan to provide parking on the lot.

Fred Pew, Birmingham-creator, stated, "I am in favor of any move to provide additional parking in the city."

Russell McBride, hardware owner, furthered, "Since I moved my hardware out of the center of the business district my business has doubled. But you can't let all your business men leave because of the lack of parking."

Spokesmen in favor of the development contended that only a healthy business district could sat-

"THIS DILLY-dallying between the city and merchants over the past years has led us to believe that only by reaching an opinion and attempting to take action on a plan we believe is best, can anything be done about the parking situation," Watkins continued.

"If the Wabek corporation and Jacobson's had failed to speculate with their own money on off-street parking, the situation here would be a great deal more difficult," Watkins said.

a thousand miles, than the cost of wheeling a ton of coal from your curb to a basement window.

Claiming that "today's girls are unfit to be wives," a Ceylon Labor Party legislator wants to pass a law to keep all girls and women from engaging in "the manly sports." "A woman's place is in the home," he goes on. "Girls should be taught those skills that make them good housekeepers and mothers." Perhaps the Ceylonese may be right... but he's a mighty brave male to stand up and say what he thinks on so tender a subject.

We are approaching the southern hurricane season. Its only rival is the wind given forth by many politicians who, to hear them talk, promise to eliminate all human woes, if elected... excluding, we presume, hurricanes and tornadoes.
