Sign For Children's Children

A sign for safety of the more than 37 children that live in homes along Aspen was erected recently and is drawing much comment, and has a second generation background.

Several parents who were told that their children were playing on the street when the sign was first erected to slow traffic in the 1930's were instrumental in placing the sign again.

Down for nearly 30 years, the sign was found on a woodpile by Carolyn Wright at the Wrights' home, Club drive in Bloomfield Hills, where they had moved after living on Aspen.

CHARLES LEWIS, another who grew up on the street, took the sign from the Wrights, and had Mrs. Charles Auger of Aspen re-erect it, changing the number from 34 to 37.

Then, Lewis, who has three children, with Al Davock and Jack Menke, both of the same street, erected it on a stake near the speed limit sign.

Police, who had said they could not erect a sign other than the narrow pavement, gave the parents the go-ahead on any sign they might erect.

The sign stands ready to warn drivers turning from Maple onto the street, in front of the Harry McGowan home, where there are five children.
