

We Heard It Said By:
 Dr. EDWIN DEER, president of the Babe Ruth baseball league. "This month we will attempt to enlarge the program for ballplayers between the ages of 13 and 16. Oddly enough, our greatest difficulty is not money, but trying to find capable coaches and managers to work with the boys."

For the first time in the 19-year history of the International Duck Calling Contest a Michigan man has brought home the trophy. Art Beauchamp of Flint, proprietor of a sports store, and longtime sportsman tried for four years to win the coveted award.

This was his year—and Art is the new World's Champion with a call he made himself.

Stuttgart, Arkansas—sometimes called the duck hunting capital of the world—plays host to contests out for the crown late in November each year. The rivalry is very keen. Judges are clustered in a remote room while the duck callers listen to a microphone.

The announcer affixes a number to each caller whose identity is unknown to the judges.

Each contestant is given two minutes to present his artistry which may include a variety of original variations but which must include three established calls.

The "in-between" call is first. This is a low-pitched, plaintive, almost pleading note, repeated several times at a rather soft level. Next comes the feed call—a hoarse, rattle-thratty announcement that it's time to eat, or even pointers in Michigan alone.

those far away flocks, undeniably titled the "Hail" call by well-versed hunters.

This rings out stridently across the marshes and open water, carrying far and wide in every direction. There's something about it that will virtually turn a duck's head a half mile away—something challenging—something that at least poses his curiosity.

According to Art Beauchamp the finest chirp out of noise, the wrong note at the wrong time, the slightest slip of the tongue will often scare more ducks than it will attract. That's why the technique has been so highly developed—and that's why the Stuttgart contest means so much to all of the contestants who flock there annually.

You and I can buy Art Beauchamp's duck call, identical to the one with which he won the title. But we can't call 'em like Art! Without years of experience in the fields and in the marshes of Michigan, you'll find duck calling is a priceless asset to a hunter, adding a new thrill to a sport that has so many pointers in Michigan alone.

Franklin, Pembroke and Walnut Lake, Scalls will be given winners.

Posters board may be obtained from Roll Call committee members.
