New York's Women Shun Informality In Public Dress

By HELEN BRUNSON

Special Writer for The Birmingham Eccentric

How do women dress in New York? Just like they do here! In the same mass-produced clothes, for which they pay less, since they're at the heart of the garment industry.

They don't wear "country" clothes, of course. In Manhattan, no slacks, bobby-sox or flat-heeled shoes. Simple cotton dresses are the thing, mainly in dark colors. And high-heeled pumps. More black shoes than white. Seen most often is the black cotton sheath dress, with white jewelry, short gloves or other man or woman seems to be out of style.

Mrs. Brunson

white, and no hat. Even on Fifth Avenue the wearing of hats by either man or woman seems to be out of style.

EVENINGS AT THE THEATER in Times Square, many beautiful hand-tucked cotton dresses are worn, lace-trimmed, low-cut and often worn with mink stoles. And speaking of the theater, there are still some good shows running. Tennessee Williams' "Cat on a Hot Tin Roof" is drawing big crowds, but we by-passed it because of the plot and general misery. We preferred to be entertained by the light British musical, "Boy Friends," in which the orchestra and dancing are superb.

Also saw "Box Stop" with Kim Stanley, and Elaine Stritch. As usual, the dialogue is "realistic." In spots, but the play is excellently done and well worth seeing.

Locals of the play and the home-towns of the playwright and principal actors are all in the middle west.

LOOKING AROUND for good restaurants, we found the best prime ribs of a lifetime, cooked to perfection and served with a plain boiled potato on top to soak up the precious juices. This dinner can be had at Longchamps where the service is the best. There are ten of these restaurants in the city.

Solvey's opposite the Penn Station, cooks a nice pork chop, and is famous for its desserts. Keen's English Chop House, W. 36th street gives the tourist a little atmosphere with the steaks, ancient theater programs lining the walls, to indicate that this place was once the hang-out of the theater greats.

The open-air restaurant on the floor of what is the skating pond at Rockefeller Center in winter, has good food and it's fun to eat under an umbrella with the flags of the United Nations flying around the square above. And if there's any money left over for gift-buying, you can find fabulous bargains in imported jewelry, cutlery, linens and novelties especially on upper Madison avenue, in the 50's.
