Robots Take Over St. Dunstan's

For Greek Theater Set

St. Dunaban's Guild is not worried about hot weather June 10, 14, 17 and 18 because the chills are built right into the script of their Greek Theater production, "R. U. R."

into the script of their Greek I header production, 'R. U.R."

There are plenty of blood chilling incidents as the story of Rossom, the mad scientist who created robots in human form, is unfolded.

"Rossom's Uhiversal Robots" and the mad scientist, are the 1921 creation of Karel Capek, Czechoslovakian playwriter who is said to have coined the word "robot". Jervis McMechan, St. Dunstan playwright and director, has brought the script up to date and suited the action and settings to Greek theater facilities.

MUCH OF THE dramatic impact is developed by Paul MUCH OF THE dramatic impact is developed by Paul N. Averill, scientist, who concentrates on making efficient robots of high intelligence but no soul, and Weston Meyer. Meyer, as Domin, seeks to "liberate man from the degradation of labor" through the sale of robots. Excellent jobs by props and makeup committees is adding a touch to the production that greatly increases the weirdness of the setting and robot characters. Advance tickets may be purchased at Grinnells, with other sales at the Pavilion gate, Lone Pine road, performance nights. In the event of rain, 'make up' shows will be staged the following Sunday.
