

Toys Copy Mom's, Dad's Equipment

This Christmas America's children will have the best chance ever to get the kind of toys they want—accurate, pint-sized replicas of the things they see their parents using daily.

For months, Barbara, chief designer at the toy manufacturer of the day, A. have been busy getting the new toys ready to go to market. The complex of everyday adult life.

There's that familiar radio set, the television set, the record player, every thing from that age of television. For the very young there are telephones, washers, colored wooden blocks, a plastic dial plate that moves like the real thing.

For older children, phones come in a variety of materials, colors, and bell tones. There are switches boards for the young boys who study

There are also models for miniature models of the highway is important for future drivers, and there are toys about automobiles. Drivers may die away of the very young, driving school by a magnified steering wheel that directs the movement of tiny cars into garages, tunnel and parking areas.

SINCE ALMOST everything in the field has been established on wheels, the toy manufacturers have produced a wide array of two, three, four and six-wheeled toys.

Perhaps Junior will skip "show off" driving in his teens if he's made of the safety sleepers via a kit that permits him to play with the act replica of the system his dad uses familiar.
