

Great Books Club Starts 7th Year

Birmingham's Great Books discussion group has scheduled its first meeting of the current season for Sept. 21, in Baldwin library at 8 p.m.

Starting its seventh year, the group has drawn local members from all over the city, businessmen and women and housewives.

One of the latter gave her reason as a desire to get beyond the kitchen door, to revitalize her mind in the fellowship of others who appreciate good literature.

A BUSINESSMAN said he joined because he wanted the stimulation of reading and thinking about something entirely different from his daily work.

There are no membership fees and no educational requirements to be met. An interest in reading and discussing good books is all that is needed.

Members read a book selected by the Great Books Foundation in Chicago, and meet every two weeks to discuss it. Two leaders are appointed for each session, purely to keep the conversation alive and interesting.

"WE ARE starting on the first year reading again," Mrs. Jeanne Logg, chairman, said. "The group changes from year to year, with many members moving away."

We Heard It Said By: No Interest in Lake Orion Inn

MRS. HOMER CLARK, 3335 Broadway (Southeast), Bloomfield Village, said the battle of the quack grass has kept us busy all during the holiday weekend. We want to send our quack grass that I don't think the grass seed can get into the ground unless we pull the quack grass out first.

Statement to The Eccentric by the owner of the Kingsley Inn, Fred T. Kingsley, who reports he has a financial interest in the Villa Inn at Lake Orion.

"After I got the Kingsley Inn, I got the Kingsley Inn," Takis said. "The Inn is entirely unfounded."

MRS. ALFRED BAINES, 504 Emergency Bldg. chairman, American Red Cross.

"The national quota for blood relief in the east has been raised to ten million dollars. No quota has been set for Birmingham or Bloomfield Hills, as communities, but the residents are asked to give generously that these thousands of victims may be back in their homes before the winter months take away."
