

Parties Original

By VIRGINIA COLE

It is the purpose of this column, not only to give ideas for your parties, but also to give pointers and suggestions as to how to enjoy giving parties. Let us direct our attention to teenagers and their parents in view of teen's parties.

It is not necessary for these young people to be reckless, careless and disrespectful at their parties. They will, for the most part, be just what the atmosphere calls for. I speak from the experience of handling hundreds of teens both professionally and as a teen parent.

FOR ONE THING, the adult must realize that the teen party will be exceptionally noisy with lots of violent laughter, some yelling and plenty of startling outbursts.

B'ham Teen-Agers To Attend Junior Achievement Meet

These Birmingham teenagers have been named delegates to the thirtieth annual National Junior Achievement conference of Junior Achievement August 19 through 24 at Miami University, Oxford, Ohio.

They are Irene M. Dorcy, 16, of 539 E. Southdown; Richard McNulty, 17, of 32921 Waldham and Herbert Scheffline, 17, of 3834 West Maple. They will be part of a 42-member delegation representing Junior Achievement of Southeastern Michigan at the conference.

They are really very clever and get off lots of funny sayings, so be prepared to laugh with them. Don't just stand aside and chuckle to yourself.

Don't be afraid to enter into the spirit and laugh heartily. This puts them at their ease and lets them know that you aren't too old to see the funny side.

THE IDEA that some teenagers and parents have, that the parents must get as far away as possible when son or daughter has a party is only true in part. The parents should be very much in evidence when the guests arrive and until they should be dressed in keeping with the occasion and mingle freely with the kids, making them feel that they are welcome, putting them at ease and letting them know that you know them all and are happy to have them in your home.

PARENTS should not be afraid to be firm if the occasion calls for it. In a large group, there generally are one or two who tend to be boisterous. Nip this in the bud. If you don't, they will be like one bad apple in the bag and it will spread like wildfire to the rest. Step right up to the offender and just say, "Take it easy, just do whatever his name is. He will respect you as will all the rest and your party will proceed on the right foot."

TEENS NEED and expect direction and even discipline. They respect authority. Do not expect your son or daughter to do this. They cannot be expected to straighten out a rowdy or even dismiss an impossible guest. You can, but there should be no liquor or beer tolerated or any guest welcomed who has been indulging in the party forcefully and finally.
