Recount

Krentler's comment reflected the general attitude of those questioned. In the strongly anti-incorporation area of the northeast, Lillian Norwood of precinct three told the commission, "We didn't have many that needed help (in voting)." which Commissioner Thomas M. Costello added, "No, I don't think that there were many at number three that needed help."

"They all seemed to know what they were doing," Mrs. Nowick stated. In precinct three 1,122 persons voted against the charter and 93 voted in favor. There were 20 voters who did not cast a ballot either for or against the charter.

LORETTA OZARZAK of precinct six said no voters commented that they had forgotten although there were 58 persons in that precinct who did not vote on the question.

"We told them to vote the proposition first," said Cornele Stringer of precinct seven.

"Nobody told me that," said Elsarvill with tongue in cheek.

"We expected you to know how," returned Mrs. Stringer with a smile.

"Is this the witness chair?" asked Velma Reiss of precinct eight. A few voters forgot to ballot on the charter said Mrs. Reiss. Asked if they gave any reason Mrs. Reiss said, "No. They wanted to go back in and vote on it though."

DOROTHY UTLEY of precinct 13 said models were used to instruct voters. In that predominantly anti-incorporation precinct 31 persons failed to vote on the charter.

Vincent Soto, one of the three persons who petitioned for the recount, said he did not question the integrity or the accuracy of the voting tabulations.

"A LOT OF PEOPLE in my association want to make sure that the election as it stands is the (correct) result," said Soto, president of Washington Village association.

Mrs. Adams said that in the June 13 election which authorized a 30-year franchise to Consumers Power Co., 214 persons went to the polls and 11 votes were lost.

Since the franchise proposal was the only issue on the ballot it would indicate, said Mrs. Adams, that voters were pushing the levers down and then pushing them right back up again before opening the curtain. To count, the levers must be pulled all the way down and left that way when the curtain is pulled back. So ended the investigation and the commission turned to the lengthy process of checking election figures.

game. Jonathan Ball and Malcolm Ferguson gave "special mention" to the John Cataldo home on Birchwood and the Hugh Hemphill home on Mayfair.

Honorable mention was awarded to the John Booz home on Riverside, with added note of the special use of Christmas music piped to the front of the house.

Also receiving honorable mention on Riverside were the homes of Chet Guilmet, W. H. Brewer, H. A. Palmer, A. B. Newcomb and Charles A. Shepard. On Beaconsfield, the William Ross home received honorable mention.

The W. J. Hiebages and W. J. Shulte homes on Sylvan lane, the Edward J. Doucet and Elmer F. Semrow homes on Devonshire, the Drury lane home of L. F. Largess, the Howard F. Heintz home on Beverly.

THE HERMAN FRIEDMAN home on Wakeock, the Rosewood home of Peter Decker, the Norchester home of James Moorcroft the C. L. Basene home on Norwood, the Ernest F. Willard home on Buckingham, the Edward J. Krentler and S. M. Krentler home on Medford also received honorable mention.

Garden club members are pleased to note that the area has never been so well decorated, are encouraged to believe that the next stimulated residents to ornament their homes in the spirit of Christmas sharing and are considering making it an annual project.

Plaxton. The meteorologist, Rick Marsh, makes a weekly weather forecast which is surprisingly correct fore often than not. Llewellyn Reaska is the circulation manager.

The first issue was no bigger than note paper size, and in 1951 it was a full page. Now it has four pages, and the final issue will contain six. The price has also increased, from one cent to four cents while those on the mailing list pay 9c. On two occasions the paper was printed rather than mimeographed, but that proved to be a bit too expensive.

BESIDES THE regular features there are often jokes, cartoons, scout and church news, world events and book reviews. They have had a cross word puzzle contest and an "I like the Franklin Court News because," contest and prizes were awarded.

Last year the editors made a sizeable profit, mostly from the out of towners, which was divided between them. This year, as several of the boys are graduating, any money they make will be spent on an ad in the BHHS year book as a permanent remembrance of an interesting work experience and many hours of fun.
