The month of June belongs to the bride and the graduate, and for these few days, at least, the mortarboard and robe will vie for the spotlight with the tulle and lace.

Back from a grand and glorious month on the European continent is Mrs. Harry Hynes of Mayfair lane. To Betty, Italy held the most charm, having toured much of the Italian countryside with stops in Rome, Pompeii, Naples, Sorrento, Florence, Venice and Capri.

During her stay in Florence, Betty attended the opening performance of "La Traviata" at the famed Florence opera house which event was preceded by a lot of color and fanfare with the President of Italy being present for the performance.

In Amsterdam, the 250th anniversary of Rembrandt was in progress with his paintings from all over the world including 6 from Russia on view.

In England the Queen's birthday was being celebrated with the traditional "Trooping of the colors," an event which the Queen rides but which Betty missed while nursing a cold. INSTEAD of the former 7,500-square-foot minimum for homes, a 22,500 to 30,000-square-foot area is required, Rosello said.

No new commercial areas were created under new zoning, although there were some shifts in existing business restrictions.

Off-street parking requirements are provided and will be followed where practical, Rosello said.

No industrial construction will be allowed, and minimum and maximum widths have been provided for commercial buildings, which must be no higher than one- and one-half stories.

"THIS IS TO prevent super-market-type of operation within the village," said Rosello, who added that other businesses that are allowed to come into Franklin will be held to those that "are of a nature for use by village residents only."

Another important restriction is that of advertising signs, which must be conservation. Size of signs will be determined by the size of the property under the new law.

Homes must be held to no more than 30 feet in height, said Rosello, who pointed out that drafters of the new law "certainly have tried not to upset existing zoning."
