ed the owners can't agree on sharing the cost—the city should settle it for us," Mallender emphasized. "Otherwise Holland'll be a dirt street 20 years from now."

The city is paying for pavement on Holland east of Eton but keeping it as a dirt road if it fails to proceed with special assessments for paving, a former mayor and city commissioner charged Monday.

"The city itself has developed figures that show gravel street maintenance in eight or nine years will equal the city's cost of a paving project," emphasized Miller. Mallender, representing one of the property owners which would benefit from the paving.
