'Playing Soldier' Also Was Game of Pioneer Youths

"Soldiers-and-Indians" was a popular game with Michigan's small fry way back in the 1830's when Black Hawk was on the war path, according to some reminiscences in the University of Michigan Historical Collection.

The Rev. Barton Taylor as a child pioneered with his parents as settlers on land now in Plymouth, He describes how he and the boys he played with were impressed by reports that Black Hawk and his Indian warriors were coming to destroy all the white people.

He writes: "The governor issued a proclamation ordering the militia of the territory to assemble in their respective townships to be drilled and trained and the United States government would furnish the arms."

"WITNESSING these military preparations, of course, the boys in every neighborhood had to form themselves into military companies."

He continues: "After drilling us till we were quite efficient our captain, who was a boy about three years older than the rest of us, told us that Indians were encamped in a certain piece of woods and we must surround and capture them."

We signified our readiness to obey orders. We were armed with wooden swords and sticks for guns, a piece of calico tied to a stick for a flag.

THE REV. TAYLOR recalls: "We marched up to a large hollow oak tree and formed in a semi-circle around it. Stepping up to the tree, he thrust his sword into the hollow and twisted it around furiously."

"Well something did come out. They were all dressed in yellow coats striped in black, had wings, and were armed with sharp lances which they knew well how to use."

"When the boys saw the yellow jackets pouring out, most of them broke ranks and ran in panic. The captain turned to run but seeing one little boy standing squarely in front of the hole vigorously whipping with a handful of brush, he thought it would not do for him to run so he turned and stood beside the little boy and fought it out."

He concludes: "What the wasps' theory of war is I can not tell. But it is a fact that the little boy who did not stir out of his tracks till the wasps had settled down to repair their torn nest was the only one of the company who was not stung."

Schedule Tests For City Drivers

Birmingham superintendent of public works Robert Kenning has made arrangements with the Michigan Trucking Association to have their driver-testing laboratory at the Birmingham Public Works Building on Eton road tomorrow.

The mobile testing laboratory of the Trucking Association offers a series of seven tests taking approximately 35 minutes per man. This facility has been a popular part of many of Michigan's county fairs and the annual Michigan State Fair held in Detroit.

The use of the driver-testing laboratory is not limited to testing truckers and thousands of motorists have taken the tests in this mobile unit. Some 200 organizations throughout Michigan have used the mobile unit, including police, corporation and educational groups.

In the battery of tests, vision is checked. Judgment of distances for parking and passing and overtaking is measured. Tests indicate a driver's field of vision, steadiness, reaction to glare from oncoming headlights, reaction time on brakes, and color discrimination. As sharp vision is of primary importance for safe driving, the visual acuity test is taken first.

Results Satisfy Heart Association

To the Editor: We have just received the enrollment records for the "Heart of the Home" classes which were held in your area recently. We are indeed gratified with the results obtained and with the number of persons who attended the classes.

On behalf of the board of trustees of the Michigan Heart Association, may I take this opportunity to extend our very sincere appreciation for the splendid cooperation which you extended to us in publicizing these classes to your readers.

It was a genuine pleasure for ERNEST T. GUY, Executive Director us to have worked in your county and we are looking forward to the opportunity of working with you again in the not too distant future.

HOW MANY MILES is it from your basement to your telephone? It surely must seem like miles every time you dash upstairs when the phone rings. All that sprinting is really unnecessary when you consider the low cost of having a telephone in your basement. The monthly charge is just about a dollar. There is just one installation charge no matter how many additional phones you have installed at the same time. You have only to call our Business Office to order yours.

JUST 80 YEARS AGO this month Alexander Graham Bell spoke these words over the first telephone. "Mr. Watson, come here, I want you." Today the telephone company offers more than 400 kinds of service. For example, besides conventional telephones, we provide telephone service to ships and automobiles, trains and trucks, foreign countries, radio and television network service and equipment for automatic telephone answering and photograph transmission. Wherever a communications need exists the telephone company stands ready to serve.
