

Peoples Column Vaccine Needed By Thousands, Chairman Says

We never fail to marvel at the perversity of our fellow men. For years parents sought a polio vaccine and backed up their demands with generous contributions to the March of Dimes.

Now we have the vaccine. When it was still in short supply the demand continued loud and clear, but now that there is plenty for the most susceptible age groups the demand has dwindled to a whisper. And this is not because the job has already been done. Far from it.

THOUSANDS of children in Oakland county remain unvaccinated. Some of them will be paralyzed by polio before the year is out. The even sadder than usual is all because this is the first year that the paralysis of children can be blamed on their parents' lack of foresight.

Why aren't parents having their children vaccinated?
1. Is it because they scorn what is easily obtained? This may be understandable in the case of silk stockings, or the like, but can the health of our children be evaluated in this way?

2. Is it because parents feel "it can't happen here"? We are all inclined to react this way about anything dreadful, but unless we take individual steps to avoid the avoidable (viz. get our children vaccinated) we are likely to be tragically surprised.

3. Is it because parents haven't heard that their children are eligible. This seems hardly possible.

4. IS IT because parents can't afford the vaccine? This just won't stand up. There is free vaccine available for those who need it. Pride should be no bar when the future health of children is involved.

5. Is it simply that parents haven't gotten around to having their children vaccinated? In many cases, probably. Wherever this is true all we can say is: How apathetic can a parent get?

Elements of all these questions are undoubtedly involved in analyzing the total picture. None is really valid. All that matters is that because of these and perhaps other reasons there will be children paralyzed by polio all their lives who needn't have been.

A hard, a bitter price indeed for children to pay for our shortcomings.
