Mother of the Bride

By The Mother of the Bride

The Mother of the Bride

(EDITOR'S NOTE: Mrs. Arthur B. McWood, 5960 Shallow Brook drive, Bloomfield township, wrote the following poem three days before the wedding of her daughter Marilyn, to Dean H. Hopper in Sept., 1955. One of The Eccentric's readers, Harold P. Meloche, 3744
Lincoln drive, forwarded the poem with the belief that our readers would enjoy it as he did. We share Mr.
Meloche's belief that those of our readers who have gone through a similar episode will enjoy Mrs. McWood's poem.)

Our daughter will soon become a bride
And her joy is a source of comfort and pride.
Invitations are out, I've slaved over plans
And gifts are arriving by post and vans.
The wedding gown's fitted, the cake has been ordered.
The trousseau selected. each gift recorded.
The trousseau selected recorded was a many selected.
The trousseau selected recorded was a many selected.
The trous was selected. Each gift recorded was a many you'd swear he was off to a fire alarm.
Took is was selected. Each gift recorded was a many you'd swear he was off to a fire alarm.
The skin savice whenever I can.
The words that he mutters are pretty grin!
Our bachelor son who'is rather reserved.
Has become a dynamic as all have observed;
He paints and repairs with such jet-propelled zest
That I need a scooter to keep abreast.
Our docile collie goes wild when bells ring—
I vow that he grins at admonishing;
He chases kind neighbors who lend us a hand
And leaps at deliveries that weddings demand.
It's lucky I've kept my complacency—
Hysterics and panic are, not for me!
It's silly for mothers to fume and worry
And become sad wrecks from all the flurry.
I think I've tackled this job quite well
I've silly for mothers to fume and worry
And become sad wrecks from all the flurry.
