Parties Original

By VIRGINIA COLE

It is amazing sometimes to realize how long it has been since you entertained your child's friends. Birthday parties excluded, how long has it been since you had just an occasional party or get-together for the kids? Adults give frequent parties themselves, with their own friends but how about your child or children?

It is very important to entertain baskets, small but pretty, and finish the party by taking them to the neighborhood. Surely a get-together of mothers would produce many ideas for youngsters social life of your neighborhood. Try it. Give your children the same amount of social fun and prestige that you yourself enjoy.

PARTIES do not always have to be elaborate affairs. There are many informal group ways in which you can let your offspring entertain that are inexpensive and take little extra work. With nice weather coming on, why not make it a point to concentrate on some nice social functions for the small try in the neighborhood? Mothers, why not get your heads together and actually plan an agenda of summer parties for your children? Someone have a morning coffee right now. Invite the girls in your neighborhood and discuss this project. While you are together, make a list of dates for children's parties for the next several months with one mother taking the responsibility for each.

WORKED on a cooperative basis, you can plan varied types of fun for your youngsters and possibilities of cooperation in handling the events would be fun for you. For instance, maybe the first mother could plan a breakfast hike to the woods. The group would enjoy a picnic breakfast, early in the morning and then gather wild flowers and dig a violet plant or two to plant in their own yard.

Perhaps there is one mother who would give an Easter brunch after church on Easter Sunday. This would be fun for them as so often after church on Easter, there is nothing left to do but come home and take off all their Easter finery, having no place to wear it further.

HOW about a May Day breakfast? Perhaps at the breakfast the party could assemble several May
