De Hull N. Travis
Visits ‘Happy Isles’

(EDITORIAL NOTE: The following article was written by De Hull N. Travis, who, with Mrs. Travis, recently completed a Caribbean cruise. They lived for a number of years in Birmingham, on Forest Ave., and now reside in Alston Park Manor, Detroit.)

It is a forbidden thing but true that the scholar’s child often goes without shoes. By this token, last winter, by an early return of the Trave family to Florida, we realized that likewise we had foregone an opportunity of a lecture of unusual pleasure, to avoid ourselves of seeing several most interesting places, but hours away - especially the West Indies.

Several articles written by Publisher George B. Arrell on the present northern for The Economist, at the time, noticed us to go back to Miami and cruise to the “Happy Isles” of the Caribbean.

Upon our return from the southern trip, we were invited by Mr. Arrell to write for his weekly publication, especially as the second lady of the world, the present minister of the Islands, was in attendance.

This time, in effect to avoid our place, we decided that the southern United States, through the present magic of transportation, are only six hours from Boston or Florida after leaving William R.有人在报纸或同期

While on this second trip, we met Mr. Arrell and his friend, Capt. “Ed” Richardson.

Thus another trip in the Haitian mountains, the tropical climate of the

WE Sailed on Tuesday, the 1st of February, and reached our first landfall at Aruba, where we could register our joy at the arrival of the Rainbow. We took a first-class chartered boat to Aruba, the first time in our lives that we had to pay for this kind of transportation.

The first thing we noticed on arrival was the great variety of flowers, both native and imported. Navigation must be made with care, and the island is not to be taken lightly.

The trip to our first landfall, Aruba, was successful. We enjoyed the beach, the fishing, and the local cuisine. We were impressed by the hospitality of the locals and the tropical climate.
