Southfield High Notes

By MARGARET GRAY

Last week in a senior English class, Mrs. Rita explained that a small fraction of our brain capacity we actually use. She added that if we were to employ all or a great part of this capacity, our physical and mental health would probably suffer from lack of sleep and overwork. That was when Ed Boyd quipped, "Oh, maybe that's why I'm so healthy."

Fancy being a teacher and reaching into your record files only to find chocolate capsules under the letter "C"? Darlene Korman and Sue Wiceman help an instructor, Ned Hodbeck's office during their study period and keep their snacks well filed.

Leather-captain Albert Landeck has started writing a book which he has named "Words to Live By." Some of the talent-evoking queries will probably be handed down from generation to generation, such as, "I hate organized fun. I like spontaneous mob."

After another loss in his wrestling, Mel Boring shrugged and declared, "It's such a pity I have to throw all my matches."

Last week at the senior class meeting, President Gary Evans was asking the class if they could agree something the class could have with the school to keep up the tradition. Someone at that moment piped, "Dave Hiltz."

The newly formed Math Science club was having the pleasure of building a treasury. With many educational projects in mind, they set out to think of a money-making activity. Someone suggested having a newspaper-like magazine, so the club has been busily working out the edition together. This magazine features a hard-made cover, math puzzles, science experiments and other interesting articles.

Most unusual part of this nine-page edition is its name. Since members are literally desperate for money to pursue their projects, they have christened the magazine "Desperate." They even have a "Letters to the Desperate Editor" page.

Recently in an English class, the teacher stated and said, "A student in a discussion is one who throws a wrench in the monkey's work."

Among students' coming home from a trip to the University of Michigan last week, the topic of hypnosis came up. Bob Ewart explained that one merely had to be down and stare at a spot on the ceiling and count slowly to 20. Any parent's something unusual was to happen when the student went "under." Boyce Miller decided to give the idea a try, so lying on the mat in the hall, he started at a light on the ceiling, counting slowly to 20. Just as he reached 17, the bus halted at a railroad and started
