Commends Ike's Recommendation On Fiscal Policy

WASHINGTON — Widespread realtor support for a broad inquiry into the nation's financial system, as called for by President Eisenhower and Congressional leaders, was reported this week by Allen A. Strom, president of the North Woodward board of realtors. Strom, of 1967 Sheffield, Birmingham, is attending the winter meeting here of the national association of real estate boards, together with about 900 realtor leaders from all parts of the country.

The White House proposal urges Congress to create a commission to study the nature, performance and adequacy of our financial system. Included, it is understood, would be an appraisal of current fiscal policies on flow of money to business elements, such as the home-buying public.

If launched, the study would be the first exhaustive inquiry into the national financial system since that which led to creation of the Federal Reserve board in 1913, Strom said.
