

Most people like parades and pageantry... and because of this many institutions of higher learning are known mostly by their football teams. Perhaps 99 and 94/100th's of a university's money and efforts are spent on trying to teach people how to work, play, and live intelligently... yet the outside world learns that its guidance seems more important than its content.

LWV Studies Constitution

Monday, the League of Women Voters of Birmingham will meet at the Community House at 1 p.m. to continue the study of the Michigan state constitution.

A skit presented by members of the state government committee will highlight the meeting. It will give historical information about the constitution and explain the procedure for revision and the amending process. Some existing problems in the executive, legislative and judicial branches of government will be noted.

The attitudes of different groups in the state toward constitutional revision will be discussed. At the conclusion of the skit, league members will divide into "buzz groups" to determine whether or not the state constitution needs revision and what the league should do about it. This decision will affect the position the Michigan league will take when the question of calling a constitutional convention automatically appears on the November, 1958, ballot.

Assisting Mrs. George Talburt, chairman of the state government committee, in organizing the skit, are Mrs. Robert Yost, Mrs. Robert Magill, Mrs. William Decker, Mrs. Alan Perkins, Mrs. Nell Stark and Mrs. George Hillinger.

Maud Directs Camp for Wayne

Thomas O. Maud, 5095 Darramore, Bloomfield township, a sophomore at Wayne State university, is operational director for "Frosh Camp," a weekend get-together for the university's entering freshmen, Jan. 25 and 26 at Clear lake camp near Dowling.

This will be the eleventh semi-annual camp sponsored by the school's student government. The activity is designed to help acquaint new freshmen with campus activities, both academic and social.

Society deadline is 3 p.m. each Tuesday.

SUE BARTON (right) shows her collection of over 50 bells in a variety of sizes, shapes and materials, to her friend Melissa McGuire, both students at Quarton. The bells are all gifts from the family or friends and have been obtained from travels all over the world.

SOME OF THESE DOLLS date back to the year 1850. Started by their mother, Mrs. John Guenther, 1141 Lake Park, the collection has been continued by daughters, Cicily, age 8½, and Ann, age 7, and will be among displays at Quarton's Hobby program, Jan. 23.

Hobbies of Children, Parents To Be Displayed at Quarton

By FRAN MAIER

A display of the most popular and the most unusual hobbies of students and their families will be on view for members of the Quarton PTA at its Hobby Night on Wednesday evening, Jan. 23 at 8 o'clock. Since the holidays the children have been talking about their individual hobbies and have brought samples of them to school.

Mrs. George Smith, PTA program chairman, has planned an interesting meeting headlined by a talk by Dr. Mildred Peters, associate professor of education in guidance and counseling at Wayne State University.

DR. PETERS, who has had vast experience in every facet of child guidance will speak to the parents and teachers about the benefits to the family and individual that can be derived from the pursuit of a creative hobby. She will suggest how to stimulate and keep alive an interest in a worthwhile hobby.

After hearing Dr. Peters' discussion, members of the PTA will be invited to enjoy refreshments and view the hobbies displayed.

PRELIMINARY investigation reveals that Quarton students do something other than watch TV.

works of art by the William Puck family has stimulated the creative talent of daughters, Lauren and Janice.

Claster Wisniewski and his sons, Carl and Dean, have built a model railway and are avid model makers. Jack Tower, a sixth grade student, has a collection of old Boston newspapers dating back to 1769.

No report of Quarton's hobbies would be complete without mention of the very professional and exciting painting, is represented. The collective mineral collection of the Keith Alcorn family. The S. Eugene Hysinsky family are musicians, artists and collectors. Ed Brown, an accomplished marksmen, collects firearms with his family, as does Rich Gibson.

COLLECTING, pennants from many places has stimulated Bill Bowring's interest and achievement in the study of geography. Lauren Elliot and his family do creative work in copper enamelling as does Sue Altman and her family.

Other students collect miniatures of all kinds, foreign and historic dolls, china animals, shells, cups and saucers, U. S. and foreign coins, and stamps.

Many make models, some create cartoons, others enjoy sporting hobbies with their families, some take photography seriously. Many make things of wood, some make things of clay, but it would seem that almost everyone at Quarton has a hobby and, after hearing Dr. Peters' talk, perhaps the parents will find a deeper interest in their own and their children's hobbies.
