

Looking Down on Suburbia

Some people have trees, others have only sun and saplings. The dark line through the center of this photo indicates the trees that partially or totally obscure the homes built among them. The neat rows of homes in the foreground were built on what once was cleared farmland in Troy. The street at bottom of picture is Derby, the curved street is Norwich. From where was the photo taken? Atop the city of Birmingham's million-gallon water storage tank at Derby and the Grand Trunk railroad.
