New Book Gives Facts on Forests

Michigan's rejuvenated forests grow enough new sawtimber,— trees large enough to make lumber— —each year to fill a train of box-cars 142 miles long. And for a state whose forests were given up as lost some years ago, that's a fairly startling state-ment.

man's use for many years in the The booklet also stresses the economic value of the forests in the state. Nearly 66,000 persons are employed full-time in the tested of the state of the st
