Give Your Children Books for Christmas

Parents whose young son or daughter constantly brings home the same favorite book from the Baldwin public library—Virginia Lee Burton's "Mike Mulligan and His Steam Shovel" or Marjorie Flack's "Boats on the River", for example—might well take the hint and select such a book for Christmas, according to Mrs. Norman Burns, boys and girls Librarian.

Books make the ideal Christmas gift. And parents shopping for children's Christmas books are reminded that old favorites continue to charm new generations. "Peter Rabbit," "Little Women," and "The Night Before Christmas" never go out of style. And this year finds "The Night Before Christmas" republished with illustrations by Jessie Wilcox Smith, famed children's artist of some forty years ago.

Other notable editions of this C. C. Moore classic are those illustrated by Arthur Rackham and Leonard Weisgard.

IN ADDITION to the old standbys, new fiction and non-fiction now cover a wealth of subjects. The year has brought some outstanding books in the field of American history as well as on space travel and weather.

Other subjects with popular appeal include: animals, family life, fantasy, such natural science topics as astronomy and birds, such hobbies as building models, collecting rocks, and making doll clothes, and the perennial favorite of children of every age level—pre-historic animals.

Thus, whatever the child's age or interest, there is certain to be a book that will make a special impression on him this Christmas—and may perhaps be so treasured that some day he will pass it along to his children. The book that is carefully selected is read not once but many times.

Parents desiring aid in selecting titles for Christmas giving are in-
