Keep Yard Safe for Children at Play

Of course you want your yard to be a safe place for your children and their friends to play this summer. Yard safety, like safety within the home, is largely a matter of spotting and eliminating accident hazards before accidents can occur.

If the ropes of the swing are frayed, don't take a chance that they will snap through the summer. They may, but if they don't the result can be a bad fall. If the swing hangs from the branch of a tree, make sure the branch is free of cracks or rot.

Check for splinters the outdoors gym, the slide, the see-saw, the sandbox. Any splinters that you find should be cut off at the base with a chisel or a sharp knife. Fill up the space with plastic wood and sand it smooth when hard.

Replace any cracked or broken rungs or boards. A cracked rung, like a frayed rope, may last thru the season, but again you don't want to take the chance. Pruning shears or nails with sharp edges can inflict a nasty wound. Cover them with rounded knobs of plastic wood, sanded smooth.

Moss Is Warning

Thick growth of moss usually indicates poorly drained soil. Using fertilizer lime may alleviate the condition but the moss problem will continue as long as the situation exists.

RAKE THE SAND in the sand-high enough so that it can't catch box from time to time to rid it of stones or broken-off pieces of metal toys. Keep a sharp eye open for boxes or boards with protruding nails. Remove clothes line when steps on the upturned teeth of a not in use, or make sure it hangs rake can be badly hurt.

Excess Shrubs Common Error In Landscaping

Overplanting is the most common error made by amateur "landscapers," believes Joseph T. Cox, extension specialist in landscape architecture at Michigan State University.

Cox points out that a foundation planting can either add or detract from the value of a house. To help owners of new homes that need to be landscaped and for those who want to redesign their landscape plan, Cox offers this general guide.

DRAW TWO LINES, beginning at the middle of the front doorstep. Run one line to each front corner of the house ending at a height halfway between the eaves and the ground. Foundation plants, when they are full grown, should fall within these lines.

If the door is in the center of the house, the lines may be symmetrical; if the door is to the side, one line will rise more steeply to the corner, indicating that taller plants on that side will help to achieve a balanced effect.

Cox says the important thing is that the plantings be balanced visually. But this doesn't mean that you need to use exactly the same plants on each side. It's a matter of balancing mass rather than form.

IF YOU WOULD like your house to appear wider, place plants beyond the corners of the house that will grow to height within a continuation of the lines from the door step.

Cox says that although there seems to be a preference for evergreens these days, the twig coloring and winter effects of many deciduous shrubs are equally interesting. But if evergreens are used, plant species such as yew, juniper, and holly. These plants

Myth Debunked

Limbs on a tree do not get higher from the ground as a tree grows. Trees, like the giant Douglas fir in the rain-drenched west coast forests, gain height only at the top and add only diameter to their entire length.

The annual movement of America's gigantic wheat crop is the biggest single transportation job in the world. . . 750,000 carloads. Other grains take another 900,000 carloads.
