Weedy Intruders

Here are "mug shots" of four weedy characters the lawn and garden grower must keep a sharp eye out for. The fellow at top is the broadleaf weed. His family includes such familiar nuisances as pliantain, dandelion, heal-all and knotweed. At bottom left is a diabolic gent known as wild garlic or wild onion. Originally a native of Europe, it came to this country in the 17th century and has spread into pastures, cultivated fields, gardens and lawns from coast to coast. At bottom right are the common chickweed (top) and his brother, the mouse-ear chickweed. Chickweeds are particularly obnoxious because of their habit of flourishing during the winter when grasses are essentially dormant. Their insistent growth smothers desirable grasses. Then, when the chickweeds fade out with the onset of hot weather in late spring, the areas they occupied are open to easy invasion by crabgrass and other weeds.

Mounds Spoil Looks

Earthworms, night crawlers and angle worms are industrious helpers in the soil. But when overly active near the surface of a lawn they spoil the looks of well-kept grass by the mounds they build. Turn the mower, smashes these mounds and soon there is a rough, bare spot.

Well Seasoned

Lumber should be thoroughly dry before it is used for cabinets and built-ins in order to avoid shrinkage. Best plan is to store lumber for several weeks in the room where it will be ultimately installed. For best results, ordinary home craftsmen should use Douglas fir, west coast hemlock or western red cedar. These woods work easily, take excellent finishes and are long-lived and durable.

Fungus Hurts Grass

Fungus disease can harm grass greatly. Use a protective program. Apply simple spreader treatment, usually at 2-3 week intervals.
