DRIVE-IN CLEANERS

Redding Repaving Delayed
New Surface for 5 Others

After all these years—15 to 20 at least—it looked for a while Monday night that Redding road would soon be drivable again.

But not yet. Birmingham city commissioners, with William Roberts dissenting, decided "no necessity" for its repaving.

Clark H. Stevens, 1386 Lakeside, and several of his neighbors convinced six commissioners that now would not be the time to repair the street—which they all admitted was badly needed.

COMMISSIONERS decided to wait until Quanton road (a block north) was paved by the county. Otherwise, they said, traffic meanwhile would be attracted to brand new Redding.

City Manager L. R. Gare said the county has been ready for two years to improve Quanton. It is being delayed until the state supreme court decides validity of the county DPW, which is to construct the branch of the N. Evergreen sewer interceptor that must cross under Quanton road west of Woodward.

Commissioners also determined necessity of taking the first step to improve five other nearby streets.

THIS WILL consist of a base coat of asphalt to preserve the surface of:

Lakeside, Randall to Midland; Midland, Lakepark to Lakeside; Lakepark, Oak to north of Midland; Willow lane, Midland to Redding; and Pine, Lakepark to Chestnutfield.

At some future date, a second asphalt layer would be added, storm sewers installed and streets widened before they would be considered permanently improved, the commission emphasized.

Undoubtedly Birmingham's most patched up street, Redding from Woodward to Lakepark has been a what-do-do problem for better than 15 years. Surface and ground water conditions, some resident opposition, a Woodward entrance that needs re-designing are some of the problems that have delayed its reconstruction.
