Parties Original
By VIRGINIA COLE

Confronted with a birthday party for a three, four or five year old this summer? Why not try a "Finder's Keeper's" party which is good for either boys or girls. Children this age love an element of suspense and challenge and they are complete individualists so when you gear your party to their natural characteristics, they are bound to have fun.

Set this up for an outdoor party and base it mainly on their ability to find pennies. In one corner of the porch or other appropriate place, make a small store by setting a low table there for the counter and possibly some book-cases shelves against the wall for the store shelves.

FESTIVELY DECORATE the table with crepe paper and possibly decorate the wall above the shelves.

NEW DEADLINE IS NOON TUESDAY FOR SOCIETY COPY

er it is on the first turn or whatever turn give him a piece of play money and let him go to the store and buy his prize.

Before the party you have glued peanuts in the shells with gold paint from the dime store. Around these you've tied a narrow ribbon and attached each one to a small tree or sturdy bush in the yard. Tell them play your tag on the conkey (this is a must for children this age as a party isn't a party without it.) Give the winner some play money and let him go to the store and buy his prize.

Next let them play something where they can all win a prize like lining them up facing you and you toss a large ball to each one in turn. When he catches it, wheth-

By this time they should be duly worn out to the point where they will sit with practically no wiggles for their ice cream, birthday cake and orange pop.

It is a good idea to let little ones like this open their presents first, before the games begin. Otherwise he or she is so excited about all the presents that he isn't a very good participant in the games of his own party.

For children of this age, it is better to keep the party to six to eight guests and for not longer than an hour to an hour-and-a-half.
