Painting House Can Be Like Eating Steak

Until American homeowners learned how to think for themselves, most thought that painting a house was something like painting an elephant—too big to tackle.

But now they know that painting a house is like eating a steak. When you divide the whole thing into bite-size sections, the under-taking is simple.

If your house is overly large or terrifically tall, you may still feel hesitant. If this is the case, you'll be interested to know that it's usually possible to find a painting contractor who will take the "high road" while you take the "low one."

Such cooperative contractors will give you pointers on procedure while you work as a member of the team.

To begin with, it's important to check over all exterior areas of your house to see where repair work is needed. Boards may have rotted and should be replaced.

PEELING PAINT is a warning that destructive moisture has forced an entrance. Its source needs to be traced so the devilment may be stopped. Rusted metal also needs careful attention. All rust must be taken off with sandpaper, steel wool or wire brush.

Where new wood is added—old coatings are completely removed. The surface must be primed. Nail head indentations should then be leveled with putty. Where rust is removed, the bare metal should be coated with a primer devised for the purpose.

It goes without saying that all rough areas should be sanded smooth and that all cracks should be filled with either putty or caulking compound. Loose dirt should also be whisked off with a dusting brush.

AFTER YOUR surface preparation is complete, it's highly important to round up all the tools and materials you'll need so you'll have them within reach, once you begin the actual painting.

Check to see that you have stirring paddles, solvent for cleaning brushes, wiping rags, drop cloths to protect the shrubbery, strainers—If the paint has been previously opened, a paint can opener, necessary ladders and brushes of the proper sizes.

For siding, you'll need a 4-inch brush for trim, a 2- or 3-inch one and, for window sash, one of the brushes designed for the purpose.

On upper sections, where a ladder is needed, paint the trim before you paint the body of the house. In this way you'll avoid marring newly painted areas with the top of your ladder. When you are working near the gutter or eaves, you can reverse the procedure, if you wish, and paint the trim last.

A FAVORED way of painting the siding on a clapboard house is to paint first the under edge of the board where it overlaps its adjoining neighbor.

Next, with a full brush, unload spots of paint along a single width within the area in which you are painting. These spots should be quite close together.

Finally, draw your brush through the spots, merging the paint and completely covering the board with the fresh coating.

The best time to paint a house is during a dry spell when the humidity's low. Don't start in the morning until the dew has dried from the surface. Then follow the shade, if possible.

WHEN PAINTING the side of a house, start at the highest point and apply paint in horizontal strips about three feet wide. Never stop in the middle of a strip for any great length of time.

You'll have fun with your painting. Furthermore, you'll enjoy the fruits of your industry for a long time to come.

Your newly-painted house will delight your eyes and renew your pride in your home. The new coat of paint will also give you the satisfaction of knowing that it's standing guard over the important investment your home represents.
