4-H Club Members Receive Ribbons

Suburbanite 4-H club met recently at the Robert Brodie home on Harrow Circle. Receiving ribbons at the Oakland county achievement day April 11 and 12 were Diane Barber, Carol Brodie, Sharon Brodie, Linda Duffer, Judy Eastburn, Jean Horton and Sarah Snyder. Others were Sue Koenigs, Betty Adams, Janet Adams, Betsy Duncan, Linda Haack, Priscilla Snyder and Helen Miller. Susan Brodie was presented trophies as one of Oakland county's two 4-H fashion queens. She will also receive a trip to the state show and club week in July at Lansing.

Drive Carefully—Collisions This Year Cost $278

Figuring the averages, it costs $278 to have an automobile accident in Birmingham this year. That's how the 132 collisions that far in 1958 average out, with a total of $36,659 in damages racked up.

Birmingham Police Chief Ralph W. Moxley said the overall accident picture for the first three months of 1958 was "the brightest in several years." Accidents were down from the 191 for the first quarter of 1957.

Moxley said strict law enforcement by police and court, "that unquestionably been a major factor in helping achieve this reduction in property loss and human suffering."

Girl Vs. Fish

Ever since she got a bite two years ago, seven-year-old Janet Kalke, of 1136 Bates, Birmingham, has been an avid fisherman. She landed this five and a half pound carp singlehanded at the Birmingham recreation department's carp carnival Saturday. Janet, who only weighs 58 pounds herself, won the grand prize for the longest fish with her 22 1/2-inch catch.

Eccentric's Editor On Press Committee

A new committee of the Michigan Press association plans an industrial promotion program in which the state's 375 daily and weekly newspapers can work to build payrolls throughout the state.

F. Granger Weil, executive vice president of the Port Huron Times Herald, chairman of the committee, which includes George Wm. Averill, managing editor of The Birmingham Eccentric.

A change in name dictated by growth and progress

ROCKWELL SPRING AND AXLE COMPANY

now becomes

ROCKWELL-STANDARD CORPORATION

On October 1, 1953, a new corporation took its place on the great horizon of U.S. business progress and advancement. The names and reputations of the two parties to this consolidation, The Timken-Detroit Axle Company and Standard Steel Spring Company, had been widely known and respected for almost half a century. It was thus decided that the identities and products of these two merged companies should be retained in the corporate name, either indefinitely, or until such time as events might dictate a change.

Now, four and a half years later, the stated aims and purposes of the new corporation have been fulfilled beyond our own hopes. Progress has been swift and sound under the direction of a management team that has all the requisites to build a solid future. A well planned program of diversification has been carried forward. Our product and marketing base has been substantially broadened. A program of plant improvement, including automation, and new plant construction, has been pushed forward. Of $95,000,000 invested in these new facilities in the past ten years, $32,000,000 has been spent in the past two years.

In addition to broadening our domestic market base, we are making rapid strides abroad as international business continues to expand. We now have operating and manufacturing arrangements in Brazil, Western Germany, and India, and are continuing exploration of profitable connections in other countries.

Here at home we recently purchased a going, heavy-duty equipment component business, hydraulic drives, from Westinghouse Electric Corporation. We have just completed arrangements to acquire, through an exchange of stock, more than 80% of the outstanding shares of Aero Design & Engineering Co. of Bethany, Oklahoma. The proposed stock offering will not become operative until after a registration statement filed under the Securities Act of 1933 becomes effective. Aero manufactures the well-known "Commander" and "Commander Axi-Cruiser" executive airplanes.

We will continue our efforts to diversify in fields that offer strong growth potentials. In light of these years of progress, and especially looking to the future, we find ourselves in the unique position of a business that has outgrown its name.

It is for this reason that we have now adopted the name Rockwell-Standard Corporation—a name that detracts nothing from a successful past, more accurately defines our present situation, and becomes, we are confident, a suitable identification for the broad pattern of our future.
