

Hitting the Wall Means Letters, According to Kingswood Tradition

By ANN BUCHANAN
Special Writer

A private secondary school, functions somewhat like a college. It has traditions that coincide with both high school and college. Kingswood school for girls is no exception.

As girls pass from the school building into the dorms, they hit the wall. No, they don't hurt themselves. Hitting the wall merely means getting mail.

SEVERAL seminars each year are traditional, too. The World Affairs seminar, held in April in conjunction with Cranbrook, is sponsored by the history department. Thirty-five juniors and seniors participate.

A religion seminar is sponsored by the student cabinet. Held the weekend before Thanksgiving, the Lake Erie conference for boys and girls in independent schools of this region is a stimulating experience. Some 20 schools will convene at Kingswood and Cranbrook this year.

A science seminar is scheduled every March. The Commencement ball is the biggest single social event each year. But the mid-winter formal is just as traditional. Students first greet each other at a "get acquainted" dance with Cranbrook the first weekend of school.

TRADITION dictates a hockey playday and tennis tournaments on the athletic scene. Sports awards are presented at Kingswood Day. An event near the close of school.

EACH senior receives her ring in September (of her senior year) at an all-school assembly. Although the girls first appear in cap and gown at commencement, they traditionally wear their cap to lunch one day during exam week.

The entire school, along with the faculty and directors march in the formal commencement procession.

TWO awards presented each year are particularly outstanding. The Margaret A. Auer scholarship award is presented to the senior maintaining the highest academic average for her last two years. Her name is inscribed on the memorial cup, and she receives a pin.

The Citizenship award is given yearly by the student council to one girl in each grade. Based on honesty, effort and citizenship, the certificate is highly coveted.

SENIOR privileges are traditional, and use of the Senior Cabin is one of the most awaited. Kingswood seniors spend many happy hours together at the Cabin.

Unique in many ways, the traditions of Kingswood are deeply felt and are an important part of each graduate's memories.
