Signs Needed to Warn You of Human Nature?

By RUTH VOGT
Special Writer

To prepare a person for sudden surprises, those who do not have the gift of second sight, should be armed with knowledge of the glaring facts of human nature. It is surprising how many people generally considered to be good role models or good examples have been exposed to our view, and the worst are not altogether unknown. The best way to be prepared is to have signs posted around your house to warn you of human nature.

A few days ago, while walking on a street, I was startled by a sight that made me feel so small. I saw a man wearing a suit and tie, carrying a briefcase, walking down the street. As I approached him, I noticed that he was holding a newspaper under his arm. Suddenly, he turned and looked at me. I was caught off guard. I thought to myself, "What a strange person!"

It is true that human nature is complex, and it is often difficult to predict how people will react. However, we can learn from the signs that are posted around us. For example, a sign that says "No parking" is a clear indication that people should not park their cars in a particular area. Similarly, a sign that says "No smoking" is a warning to people that they should not smoke in a specific location.

In conclusion, it is wise to be prepared for the unexpected. By keeping an eye out for signs, we can avoid being caught off guard by human nature's many surprises. In this way, we can navigate through life with greater ease and confidence.