Observatory Dates Are Set

CRANBROOK—Oct. 10 and 24 have been set aside for non-member groups to view the big telescope at Cranbrook Institute of Science. Stars, star clusters and nebulae will be visible on these dates.

Members may use the telescope Oct. 3 and 22. The moon will also be visible on the last two dates. William Schultz, Jr., science teacher at Cranbrook School, will be the demonstrator.

Planetarium demonstrations in October will bring the Harvest moon into prominence, as well as the Hunter's Moon. Public demonstrations are given Wednesdays at 4 p. m., Saturdays and Sundays at 2:30 and 3:30 p. m. Special group demonstrations are given by appointment.

The Institute has a temporary display of uranium minerals from the Belgian Congo, and a recently installed exhibit on trees and leaves.

"The Sanilac Petroglyphs" is the title of the Institute's newest publication, a record of Michigan's unique and only known aboriginal rock inscriptions. The book is the combined work of Dr. Robert T. Hatt, Darrel J. Richards, Carl Holmquist, Mark Papworth and Ira W. Butterfield.

Wells Wins Citation For Farm Programs

Marshall Wells, 555 Fairfax, Birmingham, WJR's farm editor, has been presented with the top award in the farm category in the Michigan Associated Press Broadcasters Association's first annual news competition.

The citation was awarded to Wells for "conducting Michigan's best regularly scheduled farm programs."

Wells takes his farm programs directly to the farmer, originating many of his programs from the WJR mobile studio unit, stationed on farms, at county fairs, conventions and once each week from the campus of Michigan State University. A member of the Future Farmers Assoc., he pilots a plane on many of his assignments. He manages many broadcasts appearances each year at 4-H Clubs Grange and other farm gatherings.

In January 1958 Wells and the WJR farm programs were recognized by Michigan State University for "distinguished service to Michigan agriculture." The award was presented by Dean Thomas K. Cowden of the College of Agriculture of Michigan State University.
