Jazz

considered one of the fastest-rising singers in the jazz world. Barbara limits her personal appearances so she can be with her young family most of the time.

Living only two blocks from the famed Hollywood and Vine in Hollywood, Barbara is a regular at the Ash Grove where she sings what ever she wants to sing, the way she feels like singing it.

"HERE I'M not competing with booze and all the social aspects that you find in the usual nightspots. I have direct communication with the audience. I sing, break it up with a little conversation and then sing some more."

ASKED if she liked working with the big name bands (and she has with Satchmo and others) Barbara said she enjoyed that too.

"There's always the big thrill of spontaneous combustion when you're working with a group. We talk it over a little and get a good idea and it's exciting the way everything begins to happen."

TRANSPORTATION is one of Barbara's big problems. Fouled up by plane schedules she appeared on the Times show in January with Louis Armstrong without benefit of rehearsal. She was already in the first number before Barbara's dad managed to plow his way through expressway traffic and to the State Fair grounds in time for her to sing her numbers.

"THE ONLY trouble is, I don't really get a chance to warm up, before the show. Sunday night I was ready to really sing 30 more songs, but our part in the program was over."

So, for a select group of friends and fellow musicians Barbara sang till 6 a.m. at a party at the Crest Lounge. She appeared on the Jack Harris show Wednesday, was on Bob Maxwell's program and other local shows during her three-day visit home.
